

The Anne E. Fowler Literacy Fellows Program

Be the Change for Connecticut's Underachieving Readers

Learn and Apply Evidence-based Practices that Support All Students' Reading Achievement

In Connecticut, only 20% of fourth grade children from disadvantaged backgrounds are reading at grade level. Fairfield University, in partnership with the Anne E. Fowler Foundation, announces the Anne E. Fowler Literacy Fellows Program, an initiative to significantly raise literacy levels among low-performing elementary school populations. The program will provide state-of-the-art teacher training through hands-on practice and research-based coursework, so that every child learns to read by third grade—the shared vision of its namesake, Dr. Anne E. Fowler, a Haskins Laboratories reading researcher and Literacy How, the organization that carries on her work.

Earn a Certificate of Advanced Study in Reading and Language Development

— Tuition Free!

Beginning in Fall 2015, this highly competitive, full-time, one-year (fall, spring, summer) program will prepare PreK to grade 3 teachers to become master teachers and classroom experts in elementary literacy instruction and teacher leaders in the area of literacy. The program will provide teachers with coursework and field practica leading to Certificate of Advanced Study in Reading and Language Development.
